Seventh Sunday in Ordinary Time

FEBRUARY 19, 2017

Leviticus 19:1-2,17-18; 1 Corinthians 3:16-23;
Matthew 5:38-48

Sometimes we tend to think of the God of the Old Testament as the God of wrath, and the God of the New Testament as the God of love. We sometimes imagine that the Old Testament emphasized law, while the New Testament is concerned with love.

But God is the same God, whether in the Old or the New Testament. Today's first reading, from Leviticus, is from the "Holiness Code." The motive for which we should do all things is because God himself is holy, and he expects us to be holy. Our reading omits many verses, but it sums them up in the one command: "Love your neighbor as yourself."

The second reading gives us another motive for holiness: We are the temple of God; the Holy Spirit lives in us. We should never disgrace that Spirit within us. When we come into church, we observe reverence and awe for the presence of God. We should have the same reverence for God who lives within us. Let us always live in God's presence.

The Gospel continues the Sermon on the Mount. The Old Law did not mean that we should take vengeance on our neighbor. "An eye for an eye" was really merciful: It means, "If someone does damage to you, you may not do any more damage to him than has been done to you." So if he hits you in the eye, you cannot mug him; you can only inflict the same damage.

But even the Old Law went beyond this. Jesus goes far beyond, in commanding us to love our enemies, to do good to those who hate us, and to pray for those who persecute us. If we only love our friends, there is no merit in that. We prove that we are Christians by showing our loving care for all persons.

The Christian moral code is tough. It demands more of us than what we "feel" by nature. Let us always strive to be holy, for the Lord is holy. Let us remember to show reverence for everyone, for we are the temples of the Spirit. And let us pray that we may live up to the moral code of Jesus and not that of this world.

The Church: Jesus instituted the Church to continue His mission in the world. We use the word mission to mean many things. The first one is that Christ received from the Father to come to the world and redeem humanity. And then, we have the mission our Church received from Christ to continue His work until the end of time. All the faithful are bound by faith to carry the love and knowledge of Christ. People choose to go to distant places where Christianity has not grown strong yet. Sometimes a parish or diocese starts a mission to animate the Christians in the area. Sometimes a small group of believers practicing their religion but not large enough to become a parish is called a mission. The religious community takes up a mission of their own to serve the community they live in. Practically every mission we were talking about is the extension of the Incarnation of the Son of God. In the beginning of His public life, Jesus invited men to follow Him and He would send them on His mission. Even when He was with them, the apostles enjoyed working for Jesus' mission. After His resurrection, He founded His Church as the sacrament of salvation. Jesus sent them into the world giving them the mandate Mt 28,19-20 "Go into the world and preach the gospel. And Mk interprets it a little differently Mk 16,15-16: He who believes and is baptized will be saved." It means that his followers have the duty to propagate both the true faith in Christ and the merited salvation by Christ. Jesus' command and the divine life that abides in the heart of His followers demand them to work for His kingdom. It means that the goodness of His truth moves His church to share with others what the followers have received. She is to lead them to faith in Christ by a living example and preaching and by the sacraments and other means of grace, so that a clear and reliable way may be opened to them. Because it is the unfolding of the mission of Christ Himself, the Church should follow the same way that Christ followed: the way of poverty, obedience, service, and self-sacrifice even to death.
