First Sunday of Lent

MARCH 5, 2017

Genesis 2:7-9;3:1-7; Romans 5:12-19;
Matthew 4:1-11

All suffering and evil in this world are traceable to the original sin of our First Parents. Snakes never talked, and probably the sin was not the eating of an apple or other fruit. Whatever the sin was, it was self-deception. When our First Parents sinned, they lost for themselves and for all their descendants the gift of sharing God's life (grace), the gift of immortality, and the gift of freedom from suffering.

As sin entered through the one man, Adam, so grace and life are restored by the new Adam, Jesus Christ. By his life, death, and resurrection, Jesus puts death to death, restores life to us, and imparts his Spirit to us.

But we are still capable of sinning again. Like our First Parents, we can deceive ourselves. The temptations of Jesus are not like our temptations. We are always tempted at our most vulnerable point.

For Jesus, it was a temptation to be the kind of glorious Messiah people expected. It was a temptation to use his divine power for his own benefit. It was a temptation to avoid the ordeal of the cross by some spectacular act which would compel belief.

Our temptations are different. We must constantly guard against self-deception, against rationalizing, against indifference, and against presumption. It is easy for us to justify ourselves because "everyone" else is doing it." It is easy to put off repentance because "there's always time." It is easy to think that we have "more important things to do" than to do the religious bit.

One day we shall stand alone before the judgment seat of God. Will our excuses stand up? Use Lent as the time to be more fervent in prayer, more generous in charity, more eager in celebrating the mysteries of faith.

The Church: Now, let us see how Catholics took part in ecumenism. The word stands for worldwide Christian unity. Acts 4,32 says, "The community of believers was of one heart and mind". But this blessed situation did not last long. History tells that even during the first century, disunity was evident. In his letter to the Corinthians 46,6, Pope Clement I writes, "Do we not have one God, one Christ, and one Spirit of grace poured out upon us? And, is there not one calling in Christ?" As the rifts became more extensive and the divisions more permanent, the Catholic Church increased its efforts since Jesus plainly proclaimed that there will be one Shepherd and one Flock. The Church only entered the movement initiated by the protestants telling that if Christians are divided, it is ineffective to give non-Christians a Christian message. But the Catholic church always insists that the authority of Rome should be accepted and claims to have fullness of revelation of God. In 1910, the protestants sponsored an international conference at Edinburgh where the ecumenical movement was inaugurated. To this meeting, St. Pius X, Pope at that time, sent a letter to be read. Later, Pius XI showed interest in the ecumenical movement and issued an encyclical on ecumenism, Mortalium Animos. But, in it he says, "Authentic unity can be born of but one single authority, one sole rule of faith, and one identical Christian belief. The protestant historians admitted that the Pope's warning was timely and helped Christianity from making a unity for unity sake that would ignore the grave issues which divide the Churches of Christendom. Vat II states, "Such persons are Christians if they have been truly baptized and believe in Christ though, their fellowship is incomplete. They have some sort of ritual actions that are sources of grace for themselves and those to whom they minister and they practice faith, hope, and charity. Though they are deficient by Catholic standards, pertain to the mystery of redemption. Catholics on their part should avoid any words, judgments, or actions that do not correspond to what other Christians believe or do. Father Joe
